Who We Are

Camara Education sets up computer labs in schools across Africa and trains teachers and local staff to use and maintain them. We achieve this thanks to generous funders, and also by working with companies in the UK, Ireland and USA to recycle surplus or end-of-life computers and other IT equipment.

Camara exists because we believe the world would be a better place if all young people were empowered through innovative education to create the life they want to lead.

What We Do

Since our foundation in 2005, we have installed more than 120,000 computers in over 10,000 schools. We estimate that these have helped 3.7 million children become digitally literate. That means they leave school with the skills needed to flourish in a digital world. They can type. They can create text documents and spreadsheets. They can use a computer for research.

We operate five Education Hubs in Africa – in Ethiopia, Kenya, Lesotho, Tanzania and Zambia. These operate as independent social enterprises serving local market needs through a sustainable business model.

Why We Do It

Working with Camara achieves both social and environmental impact: reducing waste and emissions around IT disposal, and delivering transformative digital education.

We believe that prolonging the life of computer equipment through refurbishment and reuse is a vital step towards sustainability and protecting the natural environment. In Africa, our hubs strive to become innovative leaders in e-waste management.

IT Asset Disposition

We collect your surplus or end-of-life IT equipment at a time and date that suits you. Your computers are wiped clean using the latest Blancco data destruction technology.

We operate to the highest international standards; WEEE compliant, GDPR secure and fully accredited. We provide certificates of erasure for each asset.

5

Corporate Responsibility

We can help to meet your organisation's corporate responsibility objectives by developing a mutually beneficial partnership while you support a great cause.

As well as donating IT equipment, there are many ways that companies can support our work, from one-off projects to adopting your very own individual school in Africa.

We work closely with CSR and Marketing teams to ensure positive press and brand reputation. Working with Camara is also tax efficient: we confirm the value of the equipment donated to us, which can be claimed as a charitable donation.
